

[Short Bio]

John Green

John Green is a clinical psychologist. Formerly Chief Psychologist for Central and North West London hospital group he is now Academic Director of a centre for research and teaching in stress and psychological trauma. He carries out research in the management of major incidents, outcomes of psychological treatment and vaccine hesitancy. He co-edited the first textbook on the clinical management of AIDS before going on to head a unit funded by the Department of Health to provide national training on the management of AIDS patients. Until recently he was Clinical Director for the NHS for the mental health and wellbeing response to the Grenfell Tower fire in London. He works clinically in sexual health at Imperial Healthcare Trust in London with patients with sexual dysfunction problems and those with STI's, particularly genital herpes.